The Headline:

Math Teacher / Substitute Bus Driver has to Evacuate Students from Burning Bus

The storyline: A Florida math teacher didn't like the odds when the bus she was driving went up in smoke. As a substitute driver, she wasn't familiar with that particular bus, and figured that it might be the exhaust on a cold day. But the smoke just kept on coming.

Finally, the bus driver pulled over and evacuated nearly 40 students from the bus. As it turns out, a fire had started under the bus and was starting to spread. Just as the last students were exiting, the fire reached the inside of the bus, and would have been bad news—very bad news—if the teacher had decided to drive for a few more minutes.

The good news is that nobody was hurt, even though the burnt remnants of the bus might have you thinking otherwise. It's just proof that a teacher's job goes beyond the classroom!
